Mr. Chairman and members of the Board of the FCC-

This letter is in opposition to the proposed changes to how internet services are regulated. Under the Telecommunications Act, it appears clear to me that Broadband Internet Services should be regulated as a utility. As a consumer, preserving the utility regulations of the internet (commonly known as Net Neutrality) is of critical importance. I believe that private Internet Service Providers cannot be trusted to effectively and fairly self-regulate how businesses get internet connectivity and how consumers access internet sites and services, such as Netflix. Maintaining Net Neutrality will benefit businesses and consumers-it provides an even playing field in which new and established businesses can compete, and in which consumers can access an equal, open, and free Internet.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Andrew Baca
